UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

PELANATITA OLOSONI, et al.,
Plaintiffs,
v.
HRB TAX GROUP, INC., et al.,
Defendants.

Case No. 19-cv-03610-SK

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR STAY AND DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS

Regarding Docket Nos. 60, 68, 62, 69

On November 5, 2019, the Court issued an Order denying Defendants’ motion to compel arbitration and their motion to stay the case pending arbitration. (Dkt. 51.) Defendants filed a notice of appeal of that Order to the Ninth Circuit on December 4, 2019. (Dkt. 58.) On December 5, 2019, Defendants moved to stay this case while the appeal is pending. (Dkt. 60.) Defendants subsequently filed a separate motion to dismiss Plaintiffs’ First Amended Complaint. (Dkt. 62.) Plaintiffs oppose both motions. (Dkts. 68, 69.) The Court heard oral argument on both motions on February 10, 2020. (Dkt. 78.) Having considered the submissions of the parties, the record in the case, and the relevant legal authority, and having had the benefit of oral argument, the Court HEREBY DENIES Defendants’ motion to stay and DENIES Defendants motion to dismiss, for the reasons set forth below.

BACKGROUND

In their First Amended Complaint (“FAC”), Plaintiffs allege that Defendants violated several California statutes by creating a “bait and switch” program to lure customers into paying for Defendants’ services to file tax returns. (Dkt. 19.) This case arises out of an attempt by the Internal Revenue Service (“IRS”) to encourage taxpayers to file their tax returns electronically. Rather than developing its own system, the IRS engaged with private, for-profit companies to

United States District Court

1 develop online tax services and make them available for free to certain classes of taxpayers.¹
2 (Dkt. 19 at ¶ 3.) The resulting program is commonly referred to as the “Free File” program. (Id.
3 at ¶ 4.) Several companies formed the Free File Alliance, LLC and later Free File, Inc. (“FFI”) to 4 offer those online tax services, and Defendants are currently part of FFI. (Id. at ¶¶ 31, 32.) The 5 IRS and FFI entered into agreements regarding the services, and the most recent version is the 6 Eighth Memorandum of Understanding on Service Standards and Disputes Between the Internal 7 Revenue Service and Free File, Incorporated (“MOU”). (Dkt. 19 at Ex. 2.) That MOU became 8 effective October 31, 2018, and terminates on October 31, 2021. (Id.) The MOU provides 9 specific guidelines for FFI members’ processing services, including requirements related to 10 number of taxpayers, security measures, continuity of service, and dispute resolution. (Id.) The 11 MOU provides that FFI’s members “must clearly list their free customer service options” on the 12 “Free File Landing Page (or such page must have a clear and prominent link to such disclosures 13 directly from this page).” (Dkt. 19 at Ex. 2, § 4.15.4.) However, other than that provision in 14 Section 4.15.5, the MOU is largely silent on the specific manner in which FFI’s members are 15 required to present the Free File program on their websites. Section 4.4 of the MOU simply 16 requires that the websites “be functionally adequate in permitting a taxpayer to complete 17 taxpayer’s return if the return is consistent with the Member’s free offer” and states that the IRS 18 will review member websites for “usability.” (Id. § 4.4.) The MOU also contains a provision that 19 calls for an annual review of the Free File program and provides the IRS with the unilateral ability 20 to propose additional standards. (Id.)

21 Plaintiffs allege that Defendants widely advertised the availability of the Free File program 22 but then used a variety of methods to divert potential customers into Defendants’ own programs, 23 which charged a fee. (Dkt. 19 at ¶¶ 41-81.) The manner by which Defendants allegedly diverted 24 taxpayers into Defendants’ system, which required payment, is based on the way in which a 25 taxpayer viewed Defendants’ website and then interacted with the website. (Id. at ¶¶ 53-57.) For 26 example, Plaintiffs allege that “Defendants purposely made it difficult to find” the free part of the 27

28 ¹ Generally speaking, the Free File program is for taxpayers with adjusted gross income of $66,000 or less. (Dkt. 19 ¶ 3.)

1 system “by placing a ‘noindex’ tag on the webpage for the free part of the system, with the result 2 that the search engines did not go to that page but instead to Defendants’ system which required 3 payment of fees.” (Id. at ¶ 46.) Defendants also allegedly created a webpage that “is designed to 4 capture taxpayers seeking free e-filing services” and then essentially hid the free part of the 5 system. (Id. at ¶¶ 53-59.) Plaintiffs refer to Defendants’ actions as a classic “bait and switch”
6 maneuver. (Id. at ¶ 5.) Plaintiffs specifically allege that individuals were lured by an offer falsely 7 labeled “free” into entering their information into Defendants’ website, only to be informed at the 8 end of the laborious information-entry process that they “needed” to pay for Defendants’ services 9 to complete their taxes, without ever being informed of the availability of the actual free filing 10 program that they may have qualified for. (Id. at ¶¶ 73-78.)

11 Plaintiffs bring statutory claims for violation of the Consumers Legal Remedies Act, Cal.
12 Civ. Code § 1750 et seq. (“CLRA”); violation of the False Advertising Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof.
13 Code § 17500 et seq. (“FAL”); and violation of the Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof.
14 Code § 17200 et seq. (“UCL”). (Dkt. 19.) Plaintiffs propose to represent the following class of 15 plaintiffs:

16 All persons who, between May 17, 2015 and the present, paid to file 17 one or more federal tax returns through Defendants’ internet-based 18 filing system even though they were eligible to file those tax returns 19 for free through Defendants’ True Free File Service,² and who resided in and were citizens of California at the time of the payments[.]

20 (Dkt. 19 at ¶ 110.) Plaintiffs seek a public injunction to prevent Defendants from engaging in 21 fraudulent business practices and false advertising, compensatory damages and/or restitution for 22 taxpayers who paid Defendants, and attorneys’ fees. (Id. at pages 43-46.) As to each claim, 23 “Plaintiffs, on behalf of themselves, the Classes, and the general public” request the entry of “a 24 public injunction temporarily and permanently enjoining Defendants from continuing the 25 unlawful, deceptive, fraudulent, and unfair business practices alleged in this Complaint” related to 26

27 ² Plaintiffs refer to the actual system for filing tax returns without a fee as the “True Free 28 File” system and Defendants’ system with a fee as the “Fake Free File” system. (Dkt. 19, ¶¶ 53-59.)

1 their marketing and offering of allegedly “free” tax preparation services. (Id. at page 43.)

2 In its Order denying Defendants’ motion to compel arbitration and stay the case, the Court 3 applied well-settled precedent from the Ninth Circuit and California Supreme Court to conclude 4 that Plaintiffs’ claims for public injunctive relief cannot be compelled to arbitration under the 5 CLRA, FAL, and UCL. See, e.g., Blair v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 928 F.3d 819, 822 (9th Cir. 2019); 6 McGill v. Citibank, N.A., 2 Cal. 5th 945, 956 (2017).

7 ANALYSIS

8 The Court turns first to Defendants’ motion to stay pending appeal and second to 9 Defendants’ motion to dismiss.

10 A. Motion to Stay Pending Appeal.

11 In asking that the Court stay these proceedings pending their appeal, Defendants argue that 12 their appeal presents serious legal questions, that they will suffer irreparable harm absent a stay in 13 comparison to Plaintiffs, who would not be injured by a stay, and that imposing a stay would 14 conserve judicial resources. (Dkt. 60.) Plaintiffs counter that Defendants have not set out a strong 15 case on the merits of their appeal, that Plaintiffs would be irreparably harmed by a stay, in 16 comparison to Defendants would not be harmed by a denial of a stay, and that a stay works against 17 the public interest. (Dkt. 68.)

18 1. Legal Standards.

19 Whether to issue a stay pending appeal is “an exercise of judicial discretion . . . to be 20 guided by sound legal principles.” Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 433-34 (2009). Courts consider 21 the following four factors in determining whether to issue a stay: “(1) whether the stay applicant 22 has made a strong showing that he is likely to succeed on the merits; (2) whether the applicant will 23 be irreparably injured absent a stay; (3) whether issuance of the stay will substantially injure the 24 other parties interested in the proceeding; and (4) where the public interest lies.” Leiva-Perez v.
 25 Holder, 640 F.3d 962, 964 (2011) (quoting Nken, 556 U.S. at 434).

26 The first two factors are the most important. Id. at 964 (citing Nken, 556 U.S. at 434). The 27 party seeking the stay “must show either a probability of success on the merits and the possibility 28 of irreparable injury, or that serious legal questions are raised and the balance of hardships tips

1 sharply in [the party’s] favor.” Id. at 964. As the Ninth Circuit explained, “[t]hese standards 2 represent the outer extremes of a continuum.” Id. Under this approach, “the elements . . . are 3 balanced, so that a stronger showing of one element may offset a weaker showing of another.” Id.
4 However, if the movant fails to demonstrate the substantial merit of its appeal, a stay may be 5 rejected without addressing the other factors. See, e.g., Mount Graham Coalition v. Thomas, 89 6 F.3d 554, 558 (9th Cir. 1996). “Serious questions are ‘substantial, difficult and doubtful, as to 7 make them a fair ground for litigation and thus for more deliberative investigation.’” Republic of 8 the Philippines v. Marcos, 862 F.2d 1355, 1362 (9th Cir. 1988) (quoting Hamilton Watch Co. v.
9 Benrus Watch Co., 206 F.2d 738, 740 (2d Cir. 1952). Additionally, although “[s]erious questions 10 need not promise a certainty of success, nor even present a probability of success, [they] must 11 involve a ‘fair chance of success on the merits.’” Id. (quoting National Wildlife Fed’n v. Coston, 12 773 F.2d 1513, 1517 (9th Cir. 1985)).

13 2. Discussion.

14 Defendants have not shown that their appeal is likely to succeed on the merits or that their 15 appeal raises serious legal questions. Essentially, Defendants’ argument is that the Ninth Circuit 16 wrongly decided the governing precedent on point, Blair, 928 F.3d 819. Defendants make several 17 tortured arguments as to why their reading of Blair raises “serious legal questions” for appeal, 18 essentially rehashing the arguments they made in bringing their original motion to compel. (Dkt.
19 60.) The Court has already explained why those arguments are incorrect. (Dkt. 51.) “Defendants’ 20 rehash of arguments the Court previously considered and rejected at length fails to raise a serious 21 legal question; otherwise, every time a party disagreed with a court’s ruling, a serious question 22 would exist.” In re Pac. Fertility Ctr. Litig., 2019 WL 2635539, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Jun. 27, 2019).

23 In particular, Defendants again attempt to distinguish the public injunction at issue here as 24 one that does not “benefit the general public” as required in McGill, because the injunction applies 25 only to those consumers who actually engage with Defendants’ website. 393 P.3d at 94. As the 26 Court previously discussed, this case involves Defendants’ offering of a potentially misleading 27 advertisement on the internet, to the general public, available for anyone to review. As the Court 28 previously concluded, this allegation of fraud in a broad, publicly accessible offering is exactly the

1 type of conduct that California law is designed to prevent and that arbitration cannot shield from 2 review. As was true before Defendants filed this motion to stay, this case is almost identical to 3 Blair, where the plaintiffs were a set of consumers affected by rent-to-own contracts allegedly 4 structured in violation of state law. 928 F.3d at 822-23. As here, not every member of the public
5 in Blair had actually availed herself of the contract at issue. Id. Applying McGill, the Blair court 6 held that plaintiffs, as a subset of the consuming public affected by the allegedly illegal conduct, 7 were entitled to seek public injunctive relief under California law, including the CLRA and UCL.
8 Id. at 824. As was true before Defendants filed this motion to stay, the Court remains bound to 9 follow governing Ninth Circuit precedent.

10 Defendants similarly reiterate their argument that the FAA preempts McGill. Again, the 11 Ninth Circuit in Blair explicitly rejected that argument and held, after a lengthy and thorough 12 discussion, that “the FAA does not preempt the McGill rule.” 928 F.3d at 831. Defendants have 13 not presented any novel theory that indicates the existence of a substantial legal question in this 14 area of law that would merit a stay pending appeal.

15 Defendants argue that the Ninth Circuit is wrong about whether California law can prevent 16 cases involving public injunctive relief from being compelled to arbitration. (Dkt. 60.) 17 Defendants hope that either the Ninth Circuit will grant rehearing in one of two cases related to 18 Blair or that the Supreme Court will take up the issues raised here in the very near future. (Id.) 19 Either of those things may or may not happen. Meanwhile, the Court’s Order on the motion to 20 compel arbitration applied the law as it is, not as Defendants wish it to be. Defendants have not 21 shown that they have a substantial likelihood of success on the merits or that their appeal of that 22 Order raises a serious legal question, and thus the Court need not address the remaining Nken 23 factors. Mount Graham Coalition, 89 F.3d at 558.

24 Defendants’ motion for a stay pending appeal is DENIED.

25 B. Motion to Dismiss.

26 Defendants next move to dismiss Plaintiffs’ FAC pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil 27 Procedure 12(b)(6). (Dkt. 62.) Defendants argue that Plaintiffs lack standing to sue under 28 California’s consumer protection laws because they have not sufficiently alleged reliance or injury

1 in fact. Defendants also claim that Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue injunctive relief because they 2 are now aware of any alleged trickery by Defendants and are therefore unlikely to be tricked in the 3 future. (Id.) Defendants further contend that Plaintiffs have failed to plead their causes of action 4 with sufficient specificity under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b), and that they have 5 insufficiently stated their claims under California law. (Id.) Plaintiffs counter that their 6 allegations in the FAC clearly demonstrate standing and are pled with the required specificity.
7 (Dkt. 69.)

8 1. Legal Standards.

9 i. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6).

10 Defendants bring their motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Federal 11 Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Rule 12(b)(6) authorizes a motion to dismiss where the 12 pleadings fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. When considering a motion to 13 dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the Court construes the allegations in the complaint in the light most 14 favorable to the non-moving party and takes as true all material allegations in the complaint.
15 Sanders v. Kennedy, 794 F.2d 478, 481 (9th Cir. 1986). Even under the liberal pleading standard 16 of Rule 8(a)(2), “a plaintiff’s obligation to provide the ‘grounds’ of his ‘entitle[ment] to relief’ 17 requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of 18 action will not do.” Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007) (citing Papasan v.
19 Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286 (1986)). Rather, a plaintiff must instead allege “enough facts to state a 20 claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Id. at 570.

21 “The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than 22 a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. . . . When a complaint pleads facts that 23 are merely consistent with a defendant’s liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and 24 plausibility of entitlement to relief.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (quoting 25 Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557) (internal quotation marks omitted). If the allegations are insufficient to 26 state a claim, a court should grant leave to amend, unless amendment would be futile. See, e.g., 27 Reddy v. Litton Indus., Inc., 912 F.2d 291, 296 (9th Cir. 1990); Cook, Perkiss & Lieche, Inc. v. N.
28 Cal. Collection Serv., Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 246-47 (9th Cir. 1990).

ii. Constitutional and Statutory Standing.

The California electorate “has materially curtailed the universe of those who may enforce” the provisions of the UCL and the FAL. Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 320-21 (2011). Both the UCL and the FAL require plaintiffs to demonstrate injury in fact and show that they have suffered economic harm as the result of the unfair business practices they allege. Id.; Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204 (action may be brought “by a person who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17536 (penalty provision of FAL); Koh v. S.C. Johnson & Son, Inc., 2010 WL 94265, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 6, 2010). The standing requirements of the CLRA are “essentially identical to those of the UCL and the FAL” and standing may be considered under all three statutes together. See Veera v. Banana Republic, LLC, 6 Cal. App. 5th 907, 916 (2016). “Standing under the UCL requires proof of reliance even if reliance is not an express substantive element of the underlying statute when the claim essentially sounds in misrepresentation.” Swearingen v. Late July Snacks LLC, 2017 WL 4641896, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 16, 2017). “Under California law, the economic injury of paying a premium for a falsely advertised product is sufficient harm to maintain a cause of action.” Davidson v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., 889 F.3d 956, 966 (9th Cir. 2018).

A party must demonstrate constitutional standing to pursue each form of relief requested. Davidson, 889 F.3d at 967. For the prospective remedy of injunctive relief, a plaintiff must show the threat of “certainly impending,” “not conjectural” injury. Id. Named plaintiffs in class action suits must themselves be entitled to seek injunctive relief in order to represent a class seeking that relief. Hodgers-Durgin v. de la Vina, 199 F.3d 1037, 1045 (9th Cir. 1999). A named plaintiff’s inability to rely on a company’s product representations in the future based on past misrepresentations has been held “sufficient to confer standing to seek injunctive relief.” Davidson, 889 F.3d at 967.

27 28

iii. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b).

“Rule 9(b)’s heightened pleading standards apply to all UCL, FAL, and CLRA claims that are grounded in fraud.” Cullen v. Netflix, Inc., 880 F. Supp. 2d 1017, 1025 (N.D. Cal. 2012). Where a plaintiff alleges claims grounded in fraud, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) requires

1 the plaintiff to state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud, including the “who,
2 what, when, where, and how” of the charged misconduct. See Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 3 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003); In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 1547-49 (9th Cir.
4 1994). However, Rule 9(b) particularity requirements must be read in harmony with Federal Rule 5 of Civil Procedure 8’s requirement of a “short and plain” statement of the claim. Thus, the 6 particularity requirement is satisfied if the complaint “identifies the circumstances constituting 7 fraud so that a defendant can prepare an adequate answer from the allegations.” Moore v. Kayport 8 Package Exp., Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 540 (9th Cir. 1989); see also Vess, 317 F.3d at 1106 (“Rule 9(b) 9 demands that, when averments of fraud are made, the circumstances constituting the alleged fraud 10 be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct ... so that they can 11 defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong.”) (internal 12 quotation marks and citations omitted). The plaintiff must include statements regarding the time, 13 place, and nature of the alleged fraudulent activities – “mere conclusory allegations of fraud are 14 insufficient.” Moore, 885 F.2d at 540; see also, Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir.
15 2007) (per curiam). Rule 9(b) does not extend to knowledge and intent. Assertions of “intent, 16 knowledge, and other conditions of a person’s mind” need not be stated with particularity, and 17 “may be alleged generally.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

18 2. Discussion.

19 i. Statutory Standing.

20 In support of their motion to dismiss, Defendants first argue that Plaintiffs lack standing 21 under California’s consumer protection laws because Plaintiffs have not sufficiently alleged 22 reliance on Defendants’ purported misrepresentations and because they have not suffered a 23 cognizable injury based on Defendants’ practices. (Dkt. 62.) The Court finds that Plaintiffs have 24 demonstrated standing to sue under the UCL, FAL, and CLRA.

25 As outlined above, a party must show injury in fact in the form of economic injury as a 26 result of the unfair business practices alleged to have standing to sue under the UCL, FAL, and 27 CLRA. Kwikset, 51 Cal. 4th at 320-21; Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17204, 17536. The Court 28 considers standing together under all three consumer protection statutes. Veera, 6 Cal. App. 5th at 1 916. Because the claims at issue essentially sound in misrepresentation, Plaintiffs must 2 demonstrate their reliance on Defendants' misrepresentations to have standing. Swearingen, 2017 3 WL 4641896, at *2.

4 Plaintiffs have adequately alleged that they relied on Defendants' alleged 5 misrepresentations. The FAC states that Defendants misleadingly advertised their services on 6 search engines and landing pages, making it simultaneously likely that consumers would be drawn 7 in by the word "free" but then would be unlikely to find Defendants' actual free filing offer and 8 instead lured into purchasing their services for fee. (Dkt. 19 at ¶¶ 67-81.) Plaintiff Olosoni 9 alleges that she was lured into paying for Defendant's services through her reliance on 10 Defendants' advertising of free filing, coupled with the structure of their website. (Id. at ¶¶ 82-90) 11 ("Plaintiff Olosoni spent approximately 45 minutes entering her sensitive personal and financial 12 information, in reliance" on belief her filing would be free, only to be told erroneously at the end 13 of the process that she did not qualify for free filing would be charged fees, which she paid in 14 reliance on Defendants' misrepresentations). Similarly, Plaintiff Snarr alleges that he was lured 15 by "free" language describing Defendants' services that he accessed based on a Google search.
16 (Id. at ¶¶ 92-93.) Once Plaintiff Snarr arrived at Defendants' website, he "spent multiple hours 17 entering his tax information" only to be told at the end of the process that he did not qualify for 18 Defendants' "free" offer, without simultaneously being told that he would separately be eligible 19 for filing for free using Defendants' true free filing program. (Id. at ¶¶ 91-94.) Plaintiff Snarr 20 paid the fee based on Defendants' alleged misrepresentations. (Id. at ¶¶ 95-97.)

21 In sum, Plaintiffs specifically allege that they were lured into Defendants' website under 22 the pretense of a fake free filing offer. They relied on the representation that services were free in 23 filling out the online form with their tax information. Then, at the end of the transaction, Plaintiffs 24 allege that Defendants suddenly required a fee for service, without explaining whether or not 25 Plaintiffs were in fact eligible for free filing through another part of Defendants' website.
26 Plaintiffs then paid the fee for service in reliance on Defendants' statements, despite the fact that 27 they were actually eligible to file for free through another part of Defendants' website.

28 The Court considers this almost exactly analogous to the facts in Veera, where a set of 1 consumers alleged that advertisements of a 40 percent discount posted in Banana Republic store 2 windows were misleading because they did not disclose that the advertised discount applied only 3 to certain items. 6 Cal. App. 5th at 910. The Veera plaintiffs entered the store (just as Plaintiffs 4 here clicked on the free file offer on Defendants’ website), they selected the items they wished to 5 purchase assuming that the advertised 40 percent discount applied (just as Plaintiffs here filled in 6 their tax information assuming filing would be free), and then at the point of sale the consumers 7 were informed that the 40 percent discount would not apply to their items, but they purchased 8 them anyway for a variety of reasons, including time already invested in the transaction, 9 confusion, and embarrassment (just as the Plaintiffs here were surprised to discover a fee for their 10 filings at the conclusion of the process of filing out their information). See Veera, 6 Cal. App. 5th 11 at 919-22.

12 The court in Veera concluded that “the question of reliance and causation does not rest as a 13 matter of law on whether plaintiffs knew the actual price of the items they purchased at the 14 moment money was exchanged.” 6 Cal. App. 5th at 920. Rather, as long as “reliance on the 15 misleading advertising was a substantial factor in causing plaintiff’s decision to buy, the 16 requirements of reliance and causation are met.” Id. Here, Plaintiffs have shown that they relied 17 on Defendants’ advertisement of free filing in deciding to fill out their online tax form. Though 18 they knew they would be paying for services at the point of sale, Plaintiffs have adequately shown 19 that their decision to purchase was influenced by Defendants’ advertising of free filing, which they 20 allege was misleading. Plaintiff have therefore shown the reliance necessary for standing under 21 California’s consumer protection statutes.

22 Plaintiffs have similarly demonstrated that they were injured as a result of their reliance.
23 For example, the FAC notes that both Plaintiffs Olosoni and Snarr paid to file their taxes using 24 Defendants’ website when they were in fact both eligible for free filing. (Dkt. 19 at ¶¶ 88, 95.) 25 Both Plaintiffs Olosoni and Snarr allege that, but for Defendants’ misrepresentations, they would 26 not have paid for services, but rather would have taken advantage of the free filing for which they 27 were eligible. (Id. at ¶¶ 89, 96.) The Ninth Circuit has clearly held that “[u]nder California law, 28 the economic injury of paying a premium for a falsely advertised product is sufficient harm to

1 maintain a cause of action.” Davidson, 889 F.3d at 966. In Davidson, the plaintiff purchased 2 bathroom wipes that she alleged were falsely labeled “flushable.” Id. at 961. She paid more for 3 the product than similar products cost that were not labeled “flushable,” only to discover later that 4 the wipes were not in fact suitable for disposal down a toilet, as the word “flushable” commonly 5 implies. Id. at 961-62. The Davidson court concluded that the plaintiff had standing to maintain a 6 cause of action under California consumer laws because she had paid a premium for a product 7 based on allegedly false advertising. Id. at 965. She was economically harmed because she paid 8 money she would not otherwise have paid in direct reliance on the misrepresentation. Id. at 965-9 66.

10 Here, Plaintiffs clearly allege that they paid a premium for Defendants’ product based on 11 misrepresentations by Defendants about their eligibility to file for free and the deceptive nature of 12 Defendants’ fake “free” offer. After paying for Defendants’ products, Plaintiffs later learned that 13 they could have filed for free had they not relied on Defendants’ representations. They were 14 economically harmed in the amount that they paid for Defendants’ fee services. In attempt to 15 refute Plaintiffs’ assertion that they were economically harmed, Defendants cite a line of cases 16 finding no economic injury under the California consumer statutes where Plaintiffs received the 17 “benefit of the bargain” in the transactions at issue. Koh v. S.C. Johnson & Son, Inc., 2010 WL 18 94265, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 6, 2010); Warner v. Tinder Inc., 105 F. Supp. 3d 1083, 1094-95 (C.D.
19 Cal. 2015); Hall v. Time Inc., 158 Cal. App. 4th 847, 854-55 (2008); Peterson v. Cellco P’ship, 20 164 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 1592 (2008). These cases represent merely persuasive authority, and all 21 predate the Ninth Circuit’s opinion in Davidson and the California Court of Appeals’ decision in 22 Veera, discussed above, both of which the Court finds more analogous to the case at bar. Further, 23 the Ninth Circuit has made quite clear that “the ‘benefit of the bargain’ rationale was explicitly 24 rejected in Kwikset.” Hinojos v. Kohl’s Corp., 718 F.3d 1098, 1107 (9th Cir. 2013) (citing 25 Kwikset, 120 Cal. 3d at 741). As the Hinojos court summarized, “when a consumer purchases 26 merchandise on the basis of false price information, and when the consumer alleges that he would 27 not have made the purchase but for the misrepresentation, he has standing to sue under the UCL 28 and FAL because he has suffered an economic injury.” 718 F.3d at 1107.

1 The Court therefore concludes that Plaintiffs have demonstrated the economic injury 2 required for California statutory standing.

3 ii. Standing to Seek Injunctive Relief.

4 Defendants next argue that Plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief should be dismissed
5 because Plaintiffs have not shown that they are likely to be deceived again in the future. (Dkt. 62.) 6 Plaintiffs have established standing to seek injunctive relief. As set out above, a plaintiff must 7 demonstrate constitutional standing to pursue each form of relief requested. Davidson, 889 F.3d at 8 967. For the prospective remedy of injunctive relief, a plaintiff must show the threat of "certainly 9 impending," "not conjectural" injury. Id. Named plaintiffs in class action suits must themselves 10 be entitled to seek injunctive relief in order to represent a class seeking that relief. Hodgers-
11 Durgin, 199 F.3d at 1045. A named plaintiff's inability to rely on a company's product 12 representations in the future based on past misrepresentations has been held "sufficient to confer 13 standing to seek injunctive relief." Davidson, 889 F.3d at 967.

14 Here, Plaintiffs clearly allege that they intend to seek out free filing services in the future
15 and that they will likely continue to be eligible for those services, as required by the IRS. (Dkt. 19 16 90, 97.) In Davidson, the Ninth Circuit "resolved [the] district court split" on whether plaintiffs 17 have standing to seek injunctive relief based on a past misleading representation "in favor of 18 plaintiffs seeking injunctive relief." 889 F.3d at 969. The Court found that there was an 19 imminent, non-hypothetical risk of future harm to "a previously deceived consumer [...] even 20 though the consumer now knows or suspects that the advertising was false at the time of the 21 original purchase." Id. The court reasoned that "[k]nowledge that the advertisement or label was 22 false in the past does not equate to knowledge that it will remain false in the future." Id. Such 23 consumers have suffered the informational injury of no longer being able to trust whether a 24 company's representations are true in the future. Id. at 970-72. Like the plaintiff in Davidson, 25 Plaintiffs here allege that they have been deceived by Defendants' misrepresentations about their 26 products. Plaintiffs also allege that they will continue to seek out similar products in the future; 27 however, in making their decisions, they will be unable to discern whether Defendants' future 28 representations about their products are true, based on Defendants' past conduct. Plaintiffs

1 therefore have standing to seek prospective injunctive relief based on their allegations of past 2 misrepresentation by Defendants.

3 iii. Particularity.

4 Plaintiffs have pled their California statutory claims with the particularity required by 5 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). As outlined above, “Rule 9(b)’s heightened pleading 6 standards apply to all UCL, FAL, and CLRA claims that are grounded in fraud.” Cullen, 880 F.
7 Supp. 2d at 1025. Rule 9(b) requires the Plaintiff to state specifically the “who, what, when, 8 where, and how” of the charged misconduct. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1106. In harmony with Federal 9 Rule of Civil Procedure 8’s requirement of a “short and plain” statement of the claim, the goal of 10 the particularity requirement is to provide sufficient information surrounding “the circumstances 11 constituting fraud so that a defendant can prepare an adequate answer from the allegations.”
12 Moore, 885 F.2d at 540 (9th Cir. 1989).

13 In ensuring that Rule 9(b) is satisfied in California consumer protection statute cases, 14 “[t]he focus is on whether enough facts support a reasonable consumer’s reaction to an allegedly 15 deceptive advertisement – not whether enough facts can definitively prove fraud at the pleading 16 stage. [...] Such an absurd requirement would leave every litigant outside the courthouse gate and 17 the UCL, FAL, and CLRA unused and useless.” Chester v. TJX Cos., Inc., 2016 WL 4414768, at 18 *12-13 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 18, 2016). Where a defendant’s representations on its website are at issue 19 in a California consumer protection statute case, particularity does not require exact replication of 20 the webpages at issue or precise evidence of the date of access. Ehret v. Uber Techs., 68 F. Supp.
21 3d 1121, 1129 (N.D. Cal. 2014).

22 Plaintiffs have pled their claims with particularity. Defendants argue that Plaintiffs’ 23 allegations are “devoid of necessary specifics.” (Dkt. 62.) The Court finds this argument 24 disingenuous. The FAC gives Defendants ample notice of the nature of Plaintiffs’ 25 misrepresentation claims against them. Defendants do not need the Plaintiffs to be able to 26 reconstruct the exact webpages they viewed in order to put them on notice that fraudulent 27 misrepresentations on their website, particularly relating to the use of the word “free,” 28 representations about Plaintiffs’ eligibility for free filing, and two competing systems for

1 funneling users toward tax filing methods, are at issue. Requiring Plaintiffs “to allege the precise 2 web pages viewed and the precise dates” they viewed them “would be unrealistic and needlessly 3 impede access to an important remedial statute.” Ehret, 68 F. Supp. 3d at 1129. In Ehret, the 4 Plaintiff described a deceptive advertisement scheme involving “Hassle-free Payment” on the 5 Uber app. Id. The plaintiff described the structure of the app and how she relied upon a 6 misrepresentation about price inherent in that structure to make a purchasing decision she 7 otherwise would not have made. Id. (alleging payment 20 percent over the metered fair based on 8 Uber’s misrepresentation in its app that higher price was a gratuity). The Ehret court found the 9 plaintiff’s allegations “sufficiently specific.” Id.

10 As was true in Ehret, the FAC does include particularized descriptions of Defendants’ 11 website and advertising practices in general, as well as Plaintiffs’ specific experiences of 12 Defendants’ website and advertising, along with screenshots of sample pages from those websites.
13 (Dkt. 19 at ¶¶ 41-97.) The Court finds that the FAC’s allegations are specific enough to give 14 notice of the particular misconduct alleged in order to allow Defendants to defend their case. As 15 was true in Hinojos, the FAC “specifically and plausibly alleges” that Defendants have engaged in 16 misrepresentation, including of “material information” necessary for consumers “when making 17 purchasing decisions.” 718 F.3d at 1107. Plaintiffs have specifically alleged that Defendants’ 18 representations were misleading, as well as when, where, and how they were misleading.
19 Contrary to Defendants’ protestations, Plaintiffs need not prove their misrepresentation or fraud by 20 omission theories definitively to proceed. Plaintiffs have given sufficient notice of their theories 21 and supported them with a plausible factual basis, and Defendants are sufficiently on notice based 22 on those allegations.

23 Finally, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have improperly lumped them together in making 24 their allegations. However, a properly pled “complaint need not distinguish between defendants 25 that had the exact same role in a fraud.” U.S. ex rel. Anita Silingo v. WellPoint, Inc., 904 F.3d 26 667, 677 (9th Cir. 2018). Here, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants are closely related corporate 27 entities. As such, their particular division of corporate responsibilities is uniquely located within 28 Defendants’ control. It was therefore appropriate for the FAC to make collective allegations

1 against Defendants. See In re Pac. Fertility Ctr. Litig., 2019 WL 3753456, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Aug.
 2 8, 2019) (pleading claims “as to both defendants equally” appropriate given “parent and subsidiary 3 relationship” of defendants and plaintiffs’ “limited knowledge of the operation of this 4 relationship.”)

5 Plaintiffs have satisfied Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b).

6 iv. Plausibility of Statutory Claims.

7 Plaintiffs have stated viable claims under the UCL, FAL, and CLRA. Defendants next 8 argue that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under the UCL, FAL, and CLRA because 9 Plaintiffs have not shown that Defendants had a duty to disclose their eligibility for free filing or 10 that Defendants practices were unfair or unlawful within the meaning of the UCL. (Dkt. 62.)

11 Claims brought under the UCL, FAL, and CLRA “are governed by the ‘reasonable 12 consumer’ test.” Williams v. Gerber Prods. Co., 552 F.3d 934, 938 (9th Cir. 2008). Thus, to 13 survive a motion to dismiss, plaintiffs must plausibly allege that members of the public are likely 14 to be deceived by a defendant’s conduct. Id.

15 As discussed above, Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged affirmative misrepresentations by 16 Defendants. Defendants then argue that Plaintiffs have not adequately set out facts in support of 17 their fraudulent omission theory under the standard set out in Hall v. Seaworld Ent., Inc., 747 Fed.
 18 App’x 449 (9th Cir. 2018) and Hodson v. Mars, Inc., 891 F.3d 857 (9th Cir. 2018). In those cases, 19 the Ninth Circuit clarified that, in order to state a California consumer statutory claim under a 20 fraudulent omission theory, a plaintiff must plead a “material omission” related either to safety or 21 to the “central functionality of a product or service along with evidence that the defendant (1) is 22 the plaintiff’s fiduciary, (2) has exclusive knowledge of material facts not known or reasonably 23 accessible to plaintiff, (3) actively conceals a material fact from plaintiff, or (4) makes partial 24 misrepresentations that are misleading because the omitted fact has not been disclosed. 747 Fed.
 25 App’x at 451; 891 F.3d at 863. Here, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants made a material omission 26 when they failed to inform customers who had clicked on their services labeled “free,” only to be 27 led to a fee for service page, that those same customers were also eligible for a truly free service 28 that was also available through another section of Defendants’ own website. (Dkt. 19 ¶¶ 82-97.)

1 This omission goes directly to the central function of Defendants' tax preparation products.
2 Indeed, though not fiduciaries of Plaintiffs, Defendants hold themselves out to consumers of their 3 products as tax preparation experts. The Court finds that a reasonable consumer, having clicked 4 on a part of Defendants website labeled free, only to be told they "needed" to pay for services or 5 were ineligible for the "free" service after filling in their information, would not reach the 6 independent conclusion that they were in fact still eligible for IRS free filing and that that program 7 could be found using a separate part of Defendants' website. Plaintiffs' allegations about this 8 scheme plausibly allege that Defendant actively concealed material facts from Plaintiffs regarding 9 their true eligibility for free filing and partially misrepresented the nature of the service they were 10 truly providing because the fact of Plaintiffs' eligibility to file for free had not been disclosed.
11 Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that, by not disclosing all of the tax filing options available 12 through their website in the same location on the website, and by failing to draw a distinction 13 between the "free" offer Plaintiffs' clicked on and the IRS free file offer, Defendants made 14 material omission that would have deceived a reasonable member of the public. Further, the 15 reasonable consumer inquiry is ordinarily a question of fact unsuited for resolution at the motion 16 to dismiss stage. 552 F.3d at 938-39. The Court finds that Plaintiffs have stated a plausible claim 17 for relief based on a fraudulent omission theory.

18 Finally, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs have not stated a viable claim under the "unfair" 19 practice prong of the UCL. The test for whether a business practice is unfair differs based on 20 whether the plaintiff alleging unfair practices is a competitor of the defendant or a consumer.
21 Drum v. San Fernando Valley Bar Ass'n, 182 Cal. App. 4th 247, 253 (2010). When the plaintiff is 22 a consumer, three lines of California cases suggest differing tests for unfair conduct. Id. at 256-57.
23 One line of cases has looked to whether the plaintiff has alleged that defendant's practices violate 24 a statutory, constitutional, or regulatory provision. Id. at 257. A second line of cases balances 25 considerations of whether a challenged practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, 26 or substantially injurious to consumers, the utility of defendants' conduct, and the gravity of the 27 harm to plaintiffs. Id. A third line of cases "draws on the definition of 'unfair' in section 5 of the 28 Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45, subd. (n)), and requires that '(1) the consumer

1 injury must be substantial; (2) the injury must not be outweighed by any countervailing benefits to 2 consumers or competition; and (3) it must be an injury that consumers themselves could not 3 reasonably have avoided.” Id. (citations omitted).

4 Given this lack of clarity in California law, “the Ninth Circuit has instructed that the court 5 must ‘balanc[e] the harm to the consumer against the utility of the defendant’s practice.’” Zeiger
 6 v. WellPet LLC, 304 F. Supp. 3d 837, 852–53 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (citing Lozano v. AT & T Wireless 7 Servs., Inc., 504 F.3d 718, 735–36 (9th Cir. 2007)). Here, taking Plaintiffs’ allegations as true as 8 the Court must on a motion to dismiss, it is far from obvious as a matter of law that Defendants’ 9 practices are not unfair. Under any of the three tests articulated in Drum, Plaintiffs have 10 sufficiently pled facts to survive Defendants’ motion to dismiss. As discussed above, Plaintiffs 11 have plausibly alleged violations of the FAL and CLRA alongside the UCL. In so doing, 12 Plaintiffs have adduced substantial evidence of unscrupulous and deceptive conduct toward 13 consumers. And Plaintiffs have demonstrated a substantial injury to themselves, not outweighed 14 by any benefit, that they could not reasonably have avoided in trusting Defendants’ representations 15 and using their services. The Court finds that these harms to consumers outweigh any utility in 16 Defendants’ conduct. Plaintiffs have therefore successfully stated a claim under the “unfair” 17 prong of the UCL.

18 As to Defendants’ final argument that Plaintiffs do not satisfy the “unlawful” prong of the 19 UCL, because Plaintiffs have adequately pled claims under the CLRA and FAL, they have 20 concomitantly sufficiently alleged a claim under the UCL “unlawful” prong. See Zeiger v.
 21 WellPet LLC, 304 F. Supp. 3d 837, 852 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (violations of CLRA and FAL may serve 22 as predicate violations under UCL unlawful prong).

23 Plaintiffs have pleaded viable claims for relief under the California consumer protection 24 statutes.

25 For the reasons set forth above, Defendants’ motion to dismiss is DENIED in its entirety.

26 ///

28 ///

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court DENIES Defendants' motion to stay in its entirety and DENIES Defendants motion to dismiss in its entirety.
