UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION,

Plaintiff,

v.

MATTHEW PANUWAT,

Defendant.

Case No. 21-cv-06322-WHO

ORDER DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS

Re: Dkt. No. 18

Defendant Matthew Panuwat moves to dismiss a complaint brought by the Securities and Exchange Commission (“SEC”) that Panuwat calls an unprecedented expansion of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the “Exchange Act”). The SEC alleges that Panuwat used confidential information about the acquisition of Medivation, his employer, to buy stock options in Incyte Corp., earning $107,066 in profit. It has sufficiently pleaded that the information about the acquisition was nonpublic and material to Incyte, as the acquisition would make Incyte a more valuable acquisition target. The SEC has also adequately alleged that Panuwat breached a duty to Medivation by using the information to purchase stock in a publicly traded company. As pleaded, Panuwat acted with scienter. Allowing the SEC to proceed on this theory of liability does not violate his due process rights. His motion to dismiss is denied.

BACKGROUND

Between 2014 and 2017, Panuwat worked at Medivation, a “mid-cap, oncology-focused biopharmaceutical company.” Compl. [Dkt. No. 1] ¶¶ 13, 15. At the start of his tenure, Panuwat signed the company’s insider trading policy, which stated in part:

“During the course of your employment . . . you may receive important information that is not yet publicly disseminated . . . about the Company. . . . Because of your

1 access to this information, you may be in a position to profit financially by buying 2 or selling or in some other way dealing in the Company’s securities . . . or the 3 securities of another publicly traded company, including all significant collaborators, customers, partners, suppliers, or competitors of the Company. . . .
4 For anyone to use such information to gain personal benefit . . . is illegal.”

5 Id. at ¶ 20.

6 In 2016, Panuwat was a senior director of business development, a role that included 7 “finding, evaluating, and pursuing strategic opportunities to expand Medivation’s drug products 8 and development pipeline, primarily through acquisitions and in-licensing.” Id. at ¶¶ 17-18. As 9 part of that job, Panuwat “closely tracked the stock prices, drug products, and development 10 pipelines of other biopharmaceutical companies,” including Incyte, another “valuable, mid-cap, 11 oncology-focused [company] with a profitable FDA-approved (commercial stage) drug on the 12 U.S. market.” Id. at ¶¶ 18, 22. He also received confidential information about Medivation, 13 including actual or potential acquisitions of or by the company. Id. at ¶ 19.

14 In April 2016, Medivation brought in investment banks to explore possibly merging with 15 another company. Id. at ¶ 21. The SEC contends that Panuwat worked closely with these bankers 16 and high-level Medivation executives in assessing the company’s options, and reviewed 17 presentations that “discussed Medivation’s peer companies in the biopharmaceutical industry,” 18 including Incyte. Id. at ¶¶ 21-22. It further alleges that “Panuwat himself noted to the investment 19 bankers that they might want to consider Incyte a comparable company to Medivation,” and 20 “closely” tracked the stock prices of both companies. Id. at ¶ 23.

21 During July and August 2016, Medivation confidentially solicited bids from potential 22 acquirers, information about which was shared with Panuwat. Id. at ¶ 25. On August 12, the 23 bankers sent Panuwat a summary of bids, indicating that at least five companies made premium, 24 all-cash offers and that all were “prepared to move forward quickly.” Id. at ¶ 27. Two days later, 25 Panuwat attended a meeting of the Medivation board of directors, which authorized the bankers to 26 send letters soliciting final bids by August 19, 2016. Id. at ¶ 28. The bankers had previously sent 27 Panuwat copies of those letters, which were marked “Confidential.” Id.

28 On August 18, 2016, Medivation’s CEO sent company executives, including Panuwat, an email indicating that Pfizer, Inc. (“Pfizer”) had expressed “overwhelming interest” in acquiring

1 Medivation and that Pfizer’s CEO would call Medivation’s CEO later that day to “resolve final 2 details with respect to an impending acquisition.” Id. at ¶ 30. Within minutes of receiving that 3 email, Panuwat purchased 578 Incyte call option contracts with an expiration date of September 4 16, 2016. Id. at ¶ 33. Panuwat, who had never traded Incyte stock or options before, did not 5 inform anyone at Medivation of his actions. Id. at ¶¶ 33-34.

6 On August 20, 2016, Medivation signed a merger agreement with Pfizer, which was 7 publicly announced two days later, before the market opened. Id. at ¶ 35-36. Medivation’s stock 8 prices then climbed from $67.16 per share to $80.62. Id. at ¶ 36. The stock prices of other mid-9 cap biopharmaceutical companies also increased that day, including Incyte’s. Id. at ¶ 37. Incyte’s 10 price per share rose from $76.11 to $79.80, reaching a high of $84.39 before closing at $81.98. Id.
11 Panuwat earned $107,066 as a result. Id. at ¶ 38.

12 The SEC brought this suit on August 17, 2021, alleging that Panuwat violated Section 13 10(b) of the Exchange Act, and Rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder. Dkt. No. 1. Panuwat moved 14 to dismiss on November 1, 2021. Dkt. No. 18. I heard oral argument on January 12, 2022.

15 LEGAL STANDARD

16 Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a district court must dismiss a complaint 17 if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to 18 dismiss, the plaintiff must allege “enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its 19 face.” See Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007). A claim is facially plausible 20 when the plaintiff pleads facts that allow the court to “draw the reasonable inference that the 21 defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.” See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) 22 (citation omitted). There must be “more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted 23 unlawfully.” Id. While courts do not require “heightened fact pleading of specifics,” a plaintiff 24 must allege facts sufficient to “raise a right to relief above the speculative level.” See Twombly, 25 550 U.S. at 555, 570.

26 In deciding whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief can be granted, the 27 court accepts his allegations as true and draws all reasonable inferences in his favor. See Usher v.
28 City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). However, the court is not required to 1 accept as true “allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or 2 unreasonable inferences.” See In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008).

3 Claims brought under Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act and Rule 10b-5 must also satisfy 4 the heightened pleading standard for fraud claims set forth in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b).
5 See Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005). Rule 6 9(b) requires parties to “state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake.”
7 Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

8 DISCUSSION

9 Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act makes it unlawful for any person buying or selling 10 securities to “use or employ, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security . . . any 11 manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance in contravention of such rules and regulations as 12 the [SEC] may prescribe.” 15 U.S.C. § 78(j)(b). Rule 10b-5 prohibits any person, “directly or 13 indirectly . . . in connection with the purchase or sale of any security,” from:

- 14 a) Employing “any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud;”
- 15 b) Making “any untrue statement of a material fact” or omitting “to state a 16 material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the 17 circumstances under which they were made, not misleading;” or
- 18 c) Engaging “in any act, practice, or course of business which operates or would 19 operate as fraud or deceit upon any person.”

20 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5. Rule 10b5-1(a) defines “manipulative and deceptive devices,” which:

21 “include, among other things, the purchase or sale of a security of any issuer, on the 22 basis of material nonpublic information about that security or issuer, in breach of a 23 duty of trust or confidence that is owed . . . to the issuer of that security or the 24 shareholders of that issuer, or to any other person who is the source of the material nonpublic information.”

25 See id. § 240.10b5-1(a).

26 There are two theories of insider trading liability which violate Section 10(b) and Rule 27 10b-5. United States v. O’Hagan, 521 U.S. 642, 651-52 (1997). The “traditional” or “classical 28 theory” arises “when a corporate insider trades in the securities of his corporation on the basis of 1 material, nonpublic information.” Id. Under the “misappropriation theory,” a person violates the 2 law “when he misappropriates confidential information for securities trading purposes, in breach 3 of a duty owed to the source of the information.” Id. at 652. “In lieu of premising liability on a 4 fiduciary relationship between company insider and purchaser or seller of the company’s stock, 5 the misappropriation theory premises liability on a fiduciary-turned-trader’s deception of those 6 who entrusted him with access to confidential information.” Id. In other words, the 7 misappropriation theory “reaches trading by corporate outsiders, not insiders.” SEC v. Talbot, 530 8 F.3d 1085, 1091 (9th Cir. 2008).

9 The SEC brings its claim against Panuwat under the misappropriation theory. See Oppo.
10 [Dkt. No. 19] 7:26-8:4. In order to hold him liable, the SEC must show that Panuwat “knowingly 11 misappropriated confidential, material, and nonpublic information for securities trading purposes, 12 in breach of a duty arising from a relationship of trust and confidence owed to the source of the 13 information.” See Talbot, 530 F.3d at 1092.

14 Panuwat’s argument is two-fold. First, he asserts that the complaint should be dismissed 15 because the SEC failed to adequately plead: (1) that the information at issue was material and 16 nonpublic; (2) that Panuwat breached his duty to Medivation; and (3) that Panuwat acted with 17 intent to defraud, otherwise known as scienter. See Mot. to Dismiss (“MTD”) [Dkt. No. 18] 9-12.
18 Next, he contends that this is a novel application of the misappropriation theory by the SEC, 19 which would improperly expand the law and violate Panuwat’s due process rights. See id. at 15.

20 I. FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

21 a. Confidential, material, and nonpublic information

22 A fact is material if there is a substantial likelihood that its disclosure “would have been 23 viewed by the reasonable investor as having significantly altered the ‘total mix’ of information 24 made available.” Basic Inc. v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224, 231-32 (1988); see also Talbot, 530 F.3d 25 at 1097 (stating that a fact is material “if there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable investor 26 would consider it important in deciding whether to buy or sell securities.”). Because the standard 27 is considered from the perspective of a “reasonable investor,” it is objective. United States v.
28 Reyes, 660 F.3d 454, 468 (9th Cir. 2011).

1 When mergers are involved, materiality is a fact-dependent inquiry focused “on the 2 probability that the transaction will be consummated, and its significance to the issuer of the 3 securities.” Basic, 485 U.S. at 250. Courts consider factors including “indicia of interest in the 4 transaction at the highest corporate levels,” “the size of the two corporate entities and of the 5 potential premiums over market value,” and any increase in stock price after the merger is publicly 6 announced. Id. at 239; Talbot, 530 F.3d at 1097.

7 The bulk of the parties’ arguments center on whether the information about the impending 8 Pfizer-Medivation acquisition was material to Incyte. According to Panuwat, it was not. See 9 MTD at 9-10. He argues that Rule 10b5-1(a) requires the SEC to prove that he traded in Incyte’s 10 securities “on the basis of material nonpublic information ‘about that security or issuer.’” Id. at 11 9:23-25. He contends that the SEC has not shown that he possessed any confidential information 12 about Incyte at the time he purchased the stock options. Id. at 9:25-26. Instead, he said, the SEC 13 makes a conclusory argument that because Panuwat had confidential information about 14 Medivation, it was material to “other allegedly similar biopharmaceutical companies,” including 15 Incyte. Id. at 9:27-10:2.

16 The SEC accuses Panuwat of attempting to “improperly narrow the meaning of 17 materiality.” Oppo. at 12:19. It notes that information can be material to more than one 18 company.¹ See id. at 12:20. The SEC then turns to the language of Section 10(b) and Rule 10b-5, 19 which it contends supports the proposition that information is material to more than one company 20 by broadly prohibiting insider trading in connection with “any security.” Oppo. at 13:3-15. It 21 reads Rule 10b5-1(a) similarly, arguing that “it is common sense that information regarding 22 business decisions by a supplier, a purchaser, or a peer can have an impact on a company and 23 therefore be ‘about’—or, in other words, ‘concerning’ or ‘relating to’—that company.” Id. at 24 13:19-22. Moreover, the SEC asserts, Rule 10b5-1(a) is not exhaustive, as it only describes what 25 insider trading violations “include” rather than provide a limited list. Id. at 14:7-9.

26 _____
27 ¹ Panuwat concedes that information may be material to more than one company, noting that 28 pending acquisitions “necessarily involve material nonpublic information about both the target company and acquiring company, and potentially other bidders or related companies that are specifically involved in the transaction.” See Reply [Dkt. No. 22] 10:13-18.

1 The SEC’s reading of Section 10(b) and the regulations is more persuasive than Panuwat’s.
2 Section 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 cast a wide net, prohibiting insider trading of “any security” using 3 “any manipulative or deceptive device.” See § 78j(b); § 240.10b-5 (emphasis added).
4 Importantly, Rule 10b5-1(a) does not state that the information “about that security or issuer” must 5 come from the security or issuer itself in order to be material.² See § 240.10b5-1(a). It only 6 requires that the information be material and nonpublic. See id.

7 Moreover, the rule is not exhaustive. It states that “manipulative and deceptive devices . . .
8 include, among other things, the purchase or sale of a security of any issuer, on the basis of 9 material nonpublic information about that security or issuer.” See id. (emphasis added). Even if 10 Rule 10b5-1(a) required that the information about the security or issuer come from the same 11 security or issuer, this language indicates that it would be only one example of a manipulative and 12 deceptive device prohibited by law.

13 Panuwat contends that the presumption in Basic, as reinforced by Talbot, is that 14 “information is material in the merger context to the two corporate entities negotiating the 15 transaction, not to all companies in the field.” See Reply at 9:1-5. But the holding in Basic does 16 not assign a source to the information at issue. See Basic, 485 U.S. at 250. Rather, it only focuses 17 on whether the information is significant “to the issuer of the securities.” Id. Neither Basic nor 18 Talbot foreclose the possibility that information may be significant to an issuer even if it comes 19 from outside the company. If information may be material to more than one company—as the 20 parties agree—it follows that it may be material to more than the two companies specifically 21 engaged in the transaction.

22 Through this lens, the SEC has sufficiently pleaded that the information about 23 Medivation’s looming acquisition was material to Incyte. The complaint alleges in adequate detail 24 that, given the limited number of mid-cap, oncology-focused biopharmaceutical companies with 25 commercial-stage drugs in 2016, the acquisition of one such company (Medivation) would make

26
27 ² The only context in which Rule 10b5-1(a) mentions “the source of the material nonpublic 28 information” relates to breach, not materiality itself. See 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b5-1(a) (“ . . . in breach of a duty of trust or confidence that is owed . . . to any other person who is the source of the material nonpublic information.”).

1 the others (i.e., Incyte) more attractive, which could then drive up their stock price. See Compl. at 2 ¶ 22. It is reasonable to infer that the Pfizer-Medivation merger would be consummated, 3 considering the conversations between Pfizer executives and Medivation’s CEO indicating 4 “overwhelming interest” in the deal. See id. at ¶ 30. Given the number of other companies who 5 tried to acquire Medivation, it is also reasonable to infer that those that were unsuccessful would 6 then turn their attention to Incyte. See id. at ¶ 27. The Medivation-Pfizer transaction would thus 7 be significant to Incyte, and a reasonable Incyte investor would consider it important in deciding 8 whether to buy or sell Incyte stock. This is further confirmed by the assertion that Incyte’s stock 9 price increased on the day that the Pfizer-Medivation merger was announced. See id. at ¶ 37.

10 The information related to the Medivation acquisition was also confidential and nonpublic.
11 Information becomes public when it is disclosed in a manner “designed to achieve a broad 12 dissemination to the investing public generally and without favoring any special person or group.”
13 Dirks v. SEC, 463 U.S. 646, 653 n.12 (1983). The SEC sufficiently alleges that in August 2016, 14 Panuwat received confidential information about the company’s impending acquisition, including: 15 (1) a summary of bids; (2) letters soliciting final bids that were marked “Confidential;” (3) internal 16 emails, including the August 18 message from Medivation’s CEO describing Pfizer’s 17 “overwhelming interest” in acquiring Medivation and plans to “resolve final details” by phone 18 later that day. See Compl. at ¶¶ 26-30. Pfizer’s acquisition of Medivation was publicly 19 announced on August 22. Id. at ¶ 36. Panuwat is alleged to have purchased the Incyte stock 20 options after receiving the Medivation CEO’s email on August 18; the information about the 21 impending acquisition had not been broadly disseminated to the investing public. See id. at ¶ 33.
22 Accordingly, the information was confidential and nonpublic.

23 At this point in the litigation, the SEC has sufficiently alleged that the information about 24 Medivation’s acquisition was confidential, nonpublic, and material to Incyte.

25 b. Breach of duty

26 Under the misappropriation theory, a trader may be liable if she breached “some fiduciary, 27 contractual, or similar obligation to the owner or rightful possessor of the information.” See 28 O’Hagan, 521 U.S. at 663 (citation omitted); Talbot, 530 F.3d at 1096 (same). The parties do not

1 dispute that Panuwat owed a duty to Medivation. See Oppo. at 16 n.4 (“[H]e owed Medivation a 2 duty.”); Reply at 13:28 (“Panuwat owed a duty to Medivation.”).³ The issue is whether Panuwat 3 breached that duty by purportedly using the information about Medivation’s acquisition to buy the 4 Incyte stock options.

5 Panuwat primarily contends that he did not breach his duty to Medivation because the 6 company’s insider trading policy did not prohibit trading in Incyte securities. MTD at 11:27-28.
7 He argues that the SEC failed to allege that Incyte was a significant collaborator, customer, 8 partner, supplier, or competitor of Medivation, as would be covered by the policy. Id. at 11:28-9 12:2.

10 This argument is not compelling. The plain language of the policy covers “the securities 11 of another publicly traded company, including” the enumerated categories. See Compl. at ¶ 20 12 (emphasis added). I read “including” in this context the same way I read it in the context of Rule 13 10b5-1(a). The word does not cabin the policy’s applicability to only the types of companies 14 listed. Rather, those companies are mere examples of what is covered. See Fed. Land Bank of St.
15 Paul v. Bismarck Lumber Co., 314 U.S. 95, 100 (1941) (“[T]he term ‘including’ is not one of all-16 embracing definition, but connotes simply an illustrative application of the general principle.”); 17 Ariz. State Bd. for Charter Schs. v. U.S. Dep’t of Educ., 464 F.3d 1003, 1007 (9th Cir. 2006) (“In 18 both legal and common usage, the word ‘including’ is ordinarily denied as a term of illustration, 19 signifying that what follows is an example of the preceding principle.”). Because Incyte is a 20 publicly traded company, it is covered by Medivation’s insider trading policy. See id. at ¶ 16.

21 Accordingly, the SEC has sufficiently pleaded that Panuwat breached his duty to 22 Medivation by using the information about the acquisition to buy the Incyte stock options.

23 c. Scienter

24 Scienter “refers to a mental state embracing intent to deceive, manipulate, or defraud.” 25 Ernst & Ernst v. Hochfelder, 425 U.S. 185, 194 n.12 (1976). Scienter may be established “by 26 proving either actual knowledge or recklessness.” Gebhart v. SEC, 595 F.3d 1034, 1040 (9th Cir.
27

28 ³ The complaint alleges that this duty arose under Panuwat’s employment at Medivation, along with the confidentiality and insider trading policies that he signed. Compl. at ¶ 32.

1 2010). It is a subjective inquiry that “turns on the defendant’s actual state of mind.” Id. at 1042.

2 Courts within this circuit disagree whether scienter requires a defendant to actually use the 3 material nonpublic information in carrying out the trade, or whether she must simply be aware of 4 it. See, e.g., In re Countrywide Fin. Corp. Sec. Litig., 588 F. Supp. 2d 1132, 1202-03 (C.D. Cal.
5 2008) (“Scienter . . . for insider trading requires that the insider actually use . . . the inside 6 information in deciding to make the trade.”); SEC v. Moshayedi, No. CV-12-01179, 2013 WL 7 12172131, at *13-14 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 23, 2013) (“[T]o show that [the defendant] traded ‘on the 8 basis of’ nonpublic, material information, the SEC must demonstrate his awareness of possession 9 of that information.”). The Ninth Circuit has held that scienter under Section 10(b) and Rule 10b-10 5 requires that the government show actual use. United States v. Smith, 155 F.3d 1051 (9th Cir.
11 1998). However, Smith was a criminal case—the court expressly left open whether the same 12 standard would apply to a civil proceeding. See id. at 1069 n.27. Smith also predates the 2000 13 promulgation of Rule 10b5-1, which states that a person purchases or sells a security “on the basis 14 of” material nonpublic information “if the person making the purchase or sale was aware of the 15 material nonpublic information when the person made the purchase or sale.” See § 240.10b5-1(b) 16 (emphasis added). The SEC’s claim against Panuwat satisfies either standard.

17 Panuwat argues for the actual use standard, which he contends was not met because the 18 SEC’s allegations that he “used” the information about Medivation’s acquisition to purchase the 19 Incyte stock options lacks the specificity required by Rule 9(b). MTD at 13-14. I disagree. In 20 Smith, the Ninth Circuit held that “[a]ny number of types of circumstantial evidence” might 21 indicate that a trader used the information at issue. See 155 F.3d at 1069.

22 “Suppose, for instance, that an individual who has never before invested comes into 23 possession of material nonpublic information and the very next day invests a 24 significant sum of money in substantially out-of-the-money call options. We are 25 confident that the government would have little trouble demonstrating ‘use’ in such a situation, or in other situations in which unique trading patterns . . . suggest that an investor had used inside information.”

26 Id. The allegations here parallel those in Smith. Although Medivation had been exploring a 27 potential acquisition over the preceding months, it was not until after Panuwat received an email 28 indicating a deal was imminent that he purchased the Incyte stock. He did not wait a day, as did

1 the hypothetical trader in Smith, but acted “within minutes.” See Compl. at ¶ 33. And he had 2 never traded in Incyte stock before. Id. Taken together, this suggests—at least for pleading 3 purposes—that Panuwat used the information at issue when he purchased the Incyte stock.

4 The SEC also sufficiently pleads that Panuwat was “aware of” material nonpublic 5 information when he purchased the Incyte stock. The complaint alleges, in detail, that Panuwat 6 was aware of Medivation’s impending acquisition—by way of the CEO’s email—just before 7 trading. See id.

8 In sum, the SEC has adequately shown that the information about Medivation’s acquisition 9 was nonpublic, confidential, and material to Incyte, that Panuwat breached his duty to Medivation 10 by using that information to purchase Incyte stock options, and that he acted with the requisite 11 scienter. Panuwat’s motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is DENIED.

12 II. DUE PROCESS

13 “It is established that a law fails to meet the requirements of the Due Process Clause if it is 14 so vague and standardless that it leaves the public uncertain as to the conduct it prohibits.” 15 Giaccio v. Pennsylvania, 382 U.S. 399, 402 (1966). The same is true for regulations. “In the 16 absence of notice—for example, where the regulation is not sufficiently clear to warn a party 17 about what is expected of it—an agency may not deprive a party of property by imposing civil or 18 criminal liability.” United States v. Approx. 64,695 Pounds of Shark Fins, 520 F.3d 976, 980 (9th 19 Cir. 2008) (citing Gen. Elec. Co. v. EPA, 53 F.3d 1324, 1328-29 (D.C. Cir. 1995)). To provide 20 adequate notice, the law or regulation must “give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable 21 opportunity to know what is prohibited, so that he may act accordingly.” See Grayned v. City of 22 Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108 (1972).

23 The Supreme Court has held that “a scienter requirement in a statute alleviates vagueness 24 concerns.” See McFadden v. United States, 576 U.S. 186, 197 (2015) (internal quotation marks 25 omitted); see also Gonzales v. Carhart, 550 U.S. 124, 150 (2007) (“The scienter requirements 26 narrow the scope of the Act’s prohibition and limit prosecutorial discretion.”). The Ninth Circuit 27 has similarly recognized scienter’s negation of vagueness. See, e.g., United States v. Laurienti, 28 611 F.3d 530, 542 (9th Cir. 2010) (“[T]he failure to disclose is illegal only if done with intent to

1 defraud; it cannot be said that ‘an ordinary person is not able to conform his or her conduct to’
2 acting without fraudulent intent.”).

3 Panuwat argues that the SEC’s claim—“that confidential information regarding an 4 acquisition involving Company A should also be considered material to Company B (and 5 presumably companies C, D, E, etc.) that operate within the same general industry”—stretches the 6 misappropriation theory beyond what comports with due process. MTD at 16:9-11. Before this 7 case, he argues, “no one . . . ever understood the insider trading laws to prohibit the type of 8 conduct alleged.” Id. at 15:15-17.

9 It is true that there appear to be no other cases where the material nonpublic information at 10 issue involved a third party. The SEC conceded this at oral argument. However, the SEC’s theory 11 of liability falls within the general framework of insider trading, as well as the expansive language 12 of Section 10(b) and corresponding regulations. Scierter and materiality provide sufficient 13 guardrails to insider trading liability.

14 The SEC’s allegations fit under two underlying principles: that the misappropriation theory 15 “reaches trading by corporate outsiders, not insiders,” and that information may be material to 16 more than one company. See Talbot, 530 F.3d at 1091. The first is grounded in precedent, the 17 second in commonsense. Panuwat may dispute the number of companies to which information 18 may be material, but, as explained above, the relevant case law does not foreclose the possibility 19 that the number exceeds two.

20 The SEC’s theory of liability comports with the language of Section 10(b), Rule 10b-5, 21 and Rule 10b5-1(a). Panuwat insists that I “must interpret the securities laws and SEC rules 22 enacted thereunder as written.” See Reply at 6:9. I am. Section 10(b) prohibits traders from using 23 “any manipulative or deceptive device.” 15 U.S.C. § 78(j)(b) (emphasis added). Rule 10b-5 uses 24 equally expansive language, prohibiting “any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud,” “any untrue 25 statement of a material fact,” and “any act, practice, or course of business which operates or would 26 operate as fraud or deceit.” 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5 (emphasis added). Finally, Rule 10b5-1(a) 27 provides that “manipulative and deceptive devices . . . include, among other things, the purchase 28 or sale” of securities based on material nonpublic information about that security or issuer. Id. §

1 240.10b5-1(a) (emphasis added). As written, the law and regulations prohibit more conduct than 2 is expressly stated in Rule 10b5-1(a)—and can include Panuwat’s purported actions.

3 Panuwat’s argument that the parameters of insider trading laws will become “entirely 4 unclear” should this case proceed as pleaded ignores two important checks on liability: materiality 5 and scienter. See MTD at 19:18-19. Whether information about an acquisition of Company A is 6 material to Company B (or Company C, D, or E) will depend on any number of factors, as 7 established in Basic and Talbot. If those factors are not met, the information will not be material 8 and the trader will not be liable. And if the information is material, the trader will not be liable 9 unless he acted with the requisite intent to defraud. An ordinary trader understands that buying or 10 selling securities with such an intent is prohibited by law. So long as the trader does not act with 11 scienter, he will not be liable for insider trading.

12 It is also worth noting that the Supreme Court has cautioned against dismissing claims of 13 insider trading predicated on new or unusual schemes:

14 We do not think it sound to dismiss a complaint merely because the alleged scheme 15 does not involve the type of fraud that is usually associated with the sale or 16 purchase of securities. We believe that section 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 prohibit all 17 fraudulent schemes in connection with the purchase or sale of securities, whether 18 the artifices employed involve a garden type variety of fraud, or present a unique 19 form of deception. Novel or atypical methods should not provide immunity from 20 the securities laws.

21 Superintendent of Ins. v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 404 U.S. 6, 10 n.7 (1971) (citing A.T. Brod &
22 Co. v. Perlow, 375 F.2d 393, 397 (2d Cir. 1967).

23 Panuwat is accused of such a scheme here. Although unique, the SEC’s theory of liability 24 falls within the contours of the misappropriation theory and the language of the applicable law.
25 The SEC has sufficiently alleged that Panuwat acted with scienter, and therefore had notice that 26 his purported actions were prohibited by law. His motion to dismiss on due process grounds is 27 DENIED.

28 CONCLUSION

For the reasons articulated above, Panuwat’s motion to dismiss is DENIED. He shall answer within 20 days of the date of this Order below. A Case Management Conference will be 1 held on March 8, 2022, at 2 p.m. A Joint Case Management Statement will be due by March 1, 2 2022.
